

Tuart Hill resident recognised for tireless voluntary work

Tuart Hill resident Hilda Stevenson will be recognised for her voluntary work at an event involving over 150 Amana Living volunteers at the Cygnet Cinema in Como on Thursday 14 May as part of National Volunteer Week.

Hilda has been volunteering at Amana Living's James Brown House in Osborne Park for the past 10 years. Every week she takes the time to pamper residents by giving them a manicure and spending time socializing with them as well as serving them morning tea.

Volunteer Coordinator Debbie Ward says Volunteer Week provides an ideal opportunity to thank volunteers like Hilda, who make a very positive difference to the lives of residents at James Brown House through their tireless voluntary work.

"Volunteers such as Hilda are a wonderful asset to Amana Living and it is lovely to be able to recognize their contribution during volunteer week," she says.

"Hilda's assistance helps us to improve and strengthen the services we offer to our residents and we are hugely grateful for her support, as are the residents who very much look forward to their pampering session during her visit."

"I love my volunteer work, it's good for me, good for Amana Living and in fact it's good for everyone involved," says Ms Stevenson.

"I very much believe that you give what you get in life, and I certainly feel that I gain an enormous amount every week from helping the residents and offering them a little luxury."

Around 150 of Amana Living's 325 volunteers will attend the morning tea and cinema screening of The Boy in Striped Pajamas at the Cygnet cinema on Thursday 14 May.
